

Putting a Compliance Course Online

Company Type

A privately held women-owned business located in Columbus, Ohio – having a local, state and regional presence.

Markets Served

Manufacturers, Developers, Municipalities and Cities, Large Construction Contractors, Architects and Engineering Firms.

Business Challenge

The firm had developed an environmental compliance course for the largest road project in the state's history. The department of transportation required the course be taken by anyone touching the project before they could start working. Because the location of the project was in a very rural area and since they had to train every person (which would be thousands) they needed a solution that would offer them the flexibility to have people trained quickly while they were in the field and still track, measure and report a participant's progress for compliance.

Why They Chose MediaScript

They chose MediaScript because we could create the course online, with the detailed tracking and reporting they needed, giving end-users the flexibility to watch it at any time using any computer or mobile device and not have the presenter go on-site during certain times to deliver the material thus speeding along the work progress.

How MediaScript Helped Their Business

The partnership with MediaScript allowed our client to have the flexibility to quickly educate all participants working on this project and fulfill very stringent compliance and reporting requirements set forth by the department of transportation.
